“ Amanda was my boss for a period in 2016. I had just moved to LA. I didn't know anybody and was certain that I would not be able to get a server job without any connections. Nonetheless I spent all day walking across Sunset and dropping off my resume at every restaurant I found. At one of these I was fortunate enough to give my resume to Amanda, and she decided to hire me because she liked me and wanted to take a chance on me. And this was one of the most wonderful things about Amanda. She loved people, and believed in them. She found a reason to love everyone in spite of their flaws. She was always willing to take a chance on people.

I generally do not like bosses, and have never considered a single one of them to be a friend, except Amanda. She believed in me, had extraordinary patience with me, and instinctively knew that it was not discipline or criticism, but kinship and encouragement that would make me a better part of her team.

I'm so glad I got to be a part of that team and even when the restaurant where we worked together closed, I felt that I was still a part of it. Amanda had this wonderful gift for seeing the things that made someone special, even when they were buried deep down, and she always had the patience to dig them up.

She had so much that made her special. She was this kind, creative and intelligent person. There were times when she was like a walking sunflower, she'd enter a room and everything would get a little bit brighter.

Even when she moved to Texas, I felt certain I would see her again, because Amanda was quick to love people and slow to forget them. Even if too much time passed, or if you were five hundred miles away, she would never hesitate to pick up the phone when you called. I am so lucky that I got to be her friend during the unfairly short amount of time that she was on this earth. I know I'm only one of the many people who will have to live their lives without her. I cannot believe that I can never pick up the phone and call her again. She will be unimaginably missed.

“ Searching for photos of her beautiful face and everywhere I go on my laptop I see her name. All the projects and events we did, we always said it was as if we went into battle together. She was my rock, she had my back, we finished each others sentences, she made me laugh when I wanted to cry. So much of my LA journey was by her side. Please God take care of this angel who is with you know. My heart breaks that she is no longer with us but she is a force to be reckoned with. Respect her and let her watch over us. I need her light and love. I carry your heart with my heart. Love you RMill xoHSarah
