“ Christopher was my good friend during college at UNT. He was an ally and champion for the marginalized, a hero to the hurt and vulnerable, as I remember him. I knew him as a poet and creative. He made people feel like they belonged, and he had an innate sense of responsibility to be caring and compassionate. I have a lot of stories and memories from those times together, but these seem to be the common themes involving all my memories of him. He really was one of the good guys. I wish I had known he were here in Austin before I learned of his passing. My sincerest condolences to his wife, family, and friends--you lost one of the best people out there.
