“ For those of you who knew my mom (Eva Sifuentes) know she was a strong, kind loving woman. At times, a single mother raising four young boys took strength & patience. I can remember coming home from school waiting on my mom to get home from working a 12 hr. shift & still whipping up something in the kitchen for her boys to eat. Now, that’s strength. Yeah, “My Boys” that’s what my brothers & I were referred to as. Boys she disciplined into men by any means necessary. Either by force with a belt, which I took a lot of or a cold stare that would even straighten out the wrinkles on our clothes. But at the end of the day I felt her love & forgiveness when I would hear her say, “The foods ready, come sit down & eat”. I learned kindness from her helping hands she displayed towards family members in hard times who either needed a place to stay or just a listening ear. The little we had she shared! Our household was always open to friends & family who needed a crutch to lean on or just for support. The love she had for her mom & dad, brothers & sisters showed us her compassion. She was always ready to alleviate another family member’s burden even though her life wasn’t in order. Not only my mother, but a friend I could talk to for advice. Experiences she shared with my brothers & I were to guide us in the right direction even when she knew I was doing wrong now that’s what I call unconditional love. Yet, she never gave up on me or turned her back on any one of her boys & for that I am thankful. Thankful for the priceless memories we shared that will forever be embedded in my heart ❤️ as I look forward to seeing her again one day. Until then... I love you, be good & behave.

My condolences to you and your family, I never met her but I know what it takes to raise a family on her own. Thank you for being who you are. I wish I could’ve met her, one day I will in heaven where she is now. I thank you for being there for my Sandra, she once told me about your Mom. May she Rest In Peace. I love you for loving my daughter.
