“Heath and Alice were some of the first friends we made when I started working for HDR in Alexandria, Virginia. We were the only Oklahomans working for this very international firm. Heath was an architect with a degree from Oklahoma State University. I earned my degree from the University of Oklahoma.

We worked closely on a very large hospital in York, Pennsylvania and Heath was one of the key designers. He had enormous experience in hospital design, and was well liked and respected by the staff at York Hospital. I was the project manager and Heath as a designer made a huge difference in the programming of all the departments. He continued to assist the other architects in the design phase and was a valuable "problem solver" throughout the life of the project.

Later after I moved to San Antonio, Heath and Alice were looking for employment and I happened to be working for an architectural firm here. I recommended both of them to the boss, and after the interview, both of them were hired. Again, Heath's contribution to our projects was essential.

We continued to be good friends after our retirement. He will be keenly missed.
