“ I have some fond memories of my Uncle Jim. My first was really involving my siblings. One day while visiting family my uncle presented a gift to my brother. I don't recall it being his birthday or anything. It seemed my sister and I had such envy. Uncle Jim had given my brother a "learning" game. It was a circuit board with instructions on how to wire things to create lights and possibly other things. It seemed really cool. This gift seemed so significant because it was specifically from him. Most gifts were selected by my aunt and given from the "family."

My second memory I'll share was when I was a pre-teen/young teen. At that time it seemed like I was so much younger than everyone else. Most of the time I felt a little left out, so I took to bringing books to read on family get togethers. On this occasion, I found a quiet room away from all of the family and proceeded to read. At some point, Uncle Jim came and started a conversation with me. I don't remember what it was, but it left a memory.

Later when he took up woodworking when each of my siblings had children Uncle Jim took care to create a special wooden toy for each family. I found those gifts to be so thoughtful.

May he rest in peace.
