“ So sorry to hear of my friend Jimmy’s passing. My connection with Jimmy and Bobby Wright began in 1996, when I moved back to San Antonio. I was searching for someone to ride motorcycles with that was fun to be around. I met Jimmy and Bobby at a popular motorcycle hangout one morning for breakfast. Since I had no formal training on how to ride a motorcycle properly, I soon learned that riding with these guys and staying alive, I had better step up my game. We even road the same bikes (Honda ST1100). Each time we road, I followed Jimmy closely to watch his techniques and try to imitate each move. There were days I road over my head, thank God for my guardian Angel, but I improved. Jimmy taught me to not use my breaks, because, he said “it slows you down”. Several friends followed us one day and stated “don’t you ever use your breaks?” We went on many great rides together and enjoyed each other’s company. We would even call each other after the ride to relive what we had experienced. He was funny and very easy to be with. After his surgery, he stopped riding and things seemed to change for him. When I did get to see him at the local motorcycle stores, he told me more blonde jokes than I wanted to hear. Thanks Jimmy for your excellent teaching and friendship. I have ridden many wonderful miles without an accident due to your example. May you Rest In Peace.

“ Jimmie knew every blonde joke ever told, so I’ve heard them all (many, many times...) The following is one that he always told when I was standing nearby. If you recall one that he’s told you, please post it.

“Do you know the definition of a redhead? It’s a blonde with high blood pressure...”

Yes, we heard most all of the blond jokes, but they really didn't define Jimmy. My wife and I were motorider friends with Jimmy for years during the Joe Harrison Honda days. Not many blond jokes then in the early 2000s. We also had ST-1100 & 1300s Sports Tourers at that time and shared many hours and miles together on rides in Texas, New Mexico, Arkansas, Oklahoma and Louisiana. He was generally quiet, attentive, friendly. We shared several meals together-- he picked up the tabs more than we did, he was generous also. Haven't seen him in several years when the blond jokes got him in trouble at Kent Power Sports, Selma. We knew of his poor medical care/ botched surgeries which I'm sure led to his emotional decline.
