“ I met Robert in San Antonio in 2017 at a Morrissey concert. I was alone at the merch booth and he started to talk to me and compliment my Morrissey jacket. It had a portrait of Morrissey with lyrics from The Smiths song I Dont Owe You Anything. We exchanged numbers and social media information and thats how our friendship began. We would contact each other off and on and chat about music and life. It wasn't until 2020 when we started building a stronger friendship. I was in the transition of moving from home (Moz Angeles) to Las Vegas with no friends or family. He noticed on my social media that I was posting depressing lyrics explaining how I felt at the time and he reached out. We would call each other very often. He would text me and send me uplifting messages to keep strong and things would get better. We vented with each other about everything. We became best friends from a long distance. He helped me a lot through my rough time of living away from friends and family. If it wasn't for him my transition would of gone horribly wrong. He finally met up with me in Vegas for a canceled Morrissey concerts and it was the best weekend ever. I showed him around town of things that were very touristy. He tried Ramen for the first time (which he didn't finish). We went to museums. We went to breweries. It was just a weekend of friends reconnecting and building a stronger bound. In 2021 I found out I was pregnant with twins from my boyfriend who I met in Las Vegas. Robert was so excited and gave me encouraging advice in becoming a parent. I had a c section with my daughters and they didn't want me to go past my 38th week, which gave me the chance to pick their bday. I chose December 26th in honor of Robert. He was so happy and honored by this decision I made. Robert is an amazing person. I am grateful that he came into my life at the time he did. He is the kindest and most beautiful soul. To his family, I am sorry for his passing. It was way too early but I hope it's nice knowing how wonderful he was to everyone he came paths with. I love Robert with all my heart. He will be able to see me grow as a mother now from above as he promised me he would and be my twins Guardian angels. Thank you for reading this. Take care.
