“ I met Ron and Shirley at the local bar called the Thicket back in the day. we would play darts together and attend local turnments around the San Antonio area. my condolences go out to his family and friends.

“ Ronnie and I would often have a few beers stashed in some creek or spring in Grey Forest, Texas.

We would gather up some crawdads from below the dams and cook them up right then and there, while enjoying Lone Star beers long into the night. We knew we would never go hungry.

I was too young to drive the city fire truck but it was part of my job to start the engine on Monday mornings and let it run for a while. I was also asked to do a radio check on the cb radio, which I did, but when there was a fire it was whoever got there first, take off and blare the siren. People will follow it.

One of my fondest memories of Ronnie is him leaning into the steering wheel of the fire truck holding his cigarette...siren blaring.

We were spelunkers, too; poorly equipped and lacking any training/good judgment.

One of the first things he ever said to me was, "I'm a lover, not a fighter," and he was kind and fun.

I was his Best Man: he was mine.
