“ One of my favorites memories of momma was when Mario and I went to her apartment to tell her that we were pregnant with Jayden. She was so excited. She screamed with excitement and then ran off to her room. She went to her closet and pulled out a maternity blouse she had been saving for me. She so badly wanted me to have a baby. The day Jayden was born I called her early that morning to tell her that my water had broken. She was ready to go. We picked her up and went straight to the hospital. She stayed by my side the whole time. And when I cried because they said I would have to do a C-section she calmed me down. After Jayden was born I remember waking up with her at my bedside with tears of joy in her eyes. Her first granddaughter was born. I love and miss you momma. I wish I could go back in time. All I can do is keep going forward and hope that you will visit me often.

“ Well nana I plan to share memories with you and the family. However, this one is a bit more closer to my heart then usual. When I was a toddler and mom would say okay girls let's go see nana and what seemed forever of a drive was like 15 mins ha. We would get there and it was the house by the Kmart. I don't remember the exact location but I just remember the big Christmas tree the plush carpet, the long hall way down to your bedroom that led me to your chestnut Armoire. In front of that armoire is where my memory takes place. I would sit and go through your drawer of neatly lined movies in Alphabetical order. I would pull out two movies Dirty Dancing and Shag the movie. I would sit and watch these two movies all day back and forth and then rewind them because they were vhs. For the longest time, I could not find the Shag movie. I bought Dirty Dancing on blu ray but could not fine Shag...I knew you had it on blu Ray. I always wanted to borrow it but I would follow mamas rules of no asking. Now as an Adult, I'm still searching for that movie. I guess I'll keep searching. I have tons of memories. This one I'm willing to share. I'll be seeing you Tia. I love you so much. I'll take care of mama.

“ My favorite memory of momma is when I was very small... we used to lay down on the floor in front of the TV for nap time. She would be the big spoon and I would be the little spoon. Snuggled up I would try and copy her breathing pattern. My little lungs had a hard time matching hers but I would try because I wanted to feel even closer to her. We would fall asleep and I felt so safe and loved. I will always cherish those times.
