“ When I was about 8-9, Daddy took me, Tonya, and our brothers to see Star Wars! It was such a great movie!! Another time we were in the van and the radio was on a disco station that was playing the most repetitive an lying song ever. I think Tonya was with us. I can't remember where we were going but there were no other stations in the area that came in clearly except the disco radio station. Finally he saw a McDonald's sign and got off at the next exit. For the rest of the day we laughed at the song.

He was very particular on what I was allowed to watch on TV. He was very strict and he did not budge ever on his decision. I was and still am prone to nightmares and night terrors. You can see why. There were even a couple Little House on the Prairie Episodes that as we were watching, he and Honey must have thought the same thing because they shut the TV off. So one Saturday afternoon, one of the boys had been watching by something and did not turn the TV off. It only took a few minutes for one of my parents or it could have been Tonya, to realize that I should. not be seeing this show. Well, however long I saw those huge spiders climbing out of a box on a plane, it was long enough for my imagination, even in my sleep, to think Tony's hand that briefly touched my arm was a huge spider. Yup, I started screaming and crying in my sleep. Yup. I woke the entire family up. Yes, I wanted my daddy. He was the one who could calm me down the fastest.
