I knew Sherry from working at The Lazy Susan Restaurant in Cedarburg, WI. A friend of mine told me about this new restaurant opening in Cedarburg. And since the company I was Managing for at the time kept making cut back after cut back, I jumped at the opportunity to get back into serving and bartending. Sherry, Cheryl, Dan and at that time Savana became my family. Dan and Cheryl got married during that time and had the reception at The Lazy Susan. I was most honored to big such a big part of the whole event. Not only did I get to help organize everything at the restaurant and head the service, and had the honor of being able to view the ceremony and be a guest at the reception. But I was got to work side by side Sherry that day and was able to make sure she was able to be front and center for the ceremony of the union of Her only daughter. though Sherry had the biggest heart of anybody I've ever know. Even with everything involved with the restaurant and the stress of all of it she still took me in to her heart like one of her own during a personally hard time in my own life. I'll never forget the day I was falling apart on the back stoop at the restaurant. I was crying on her should and she was giving me the biggest hug. told me that things would work out, you'll see. Told me to breath, take a few moments to get myself together. And then in that sincere but humorous way of her she said to me "Now go wash your face and put some makeup on your look terrible" . Sounds so funny but it mad me smile and even laugh, because that was her way of saying love you kiddo. My point is that she had so much going on that she should have been the on crying on my should, but that wasn't Sherry. She didn't even let many people see her upset or stress. I feel so honored to have been one of the people she did actually lean on and let be there for her. Sherry is the strongest, wholehearted, unconditionally loving, and genuine person I have been honored to know and love, Aside from my Great Gram Cora. Thank you Sherry for the honor of being a part of your life. May God's pure white light and love surround you as you continue your journey.
